New clubhouses are in season

The traditional reason to build a new clubhouse in the Chicago area is because a fire consumed the old one.

Four new clubhouses are opening at public courses in the Chicago area this year and next, and only one is because of a fire – decades back, in fact. All four are being built by municipal entities.

That clubhouse is the one pictured in a rendering below, and it will be prominent yet fit naturally into the landscape at The Preserve at Oak Meadows.

Conceived by Daniel Wohlfeil Design, the modernistic 18,000-square foot building is nothing like the old 40,000-square foot Tudor clubhouse that dated to the course's palmy days as Elmhurst Country Club. A lightning strike and out-of-control fire in 2009 spelled the end of that landmark, and the space sat vacant for years while the DuPage County Forest Preserve District mulled how to replace the structure – after the major remodeling of the course itself.

The result is a stylish $12.6 million building. (The cost includes nearby solar panels for the cart fleet.)

Also under construction or just opening in the area:

- Fox Run, part of a $10 million program including a new maintenance facility.

- Settler's Hill, in conjunction with a remodeling of the golf course. The new building, replacing a dairy barn that preceded the building of the course on a landfill, will open when the revamped course does next spring.

- Sportsman's – recently renamed Heritage Oaks – debuts a new clubhouse along with the Rick Jacobson remodeling of their 27-hole complex.

Matsuyama's victory as major as it gets

This month's Masters was not the most exciting tournament held at the course down the street from the Hooters on Washington Road. Once Hideki Matsuyama took the lead from Justin Rose on Saturday afternoon, he ran from the pack and kept the lead to the finish. Only the aborted challenge of Xander Schauffele and the emergence of Will Zalatoris, the flagstick-think rookie whose lack of status on the PGA Tour exposes the circuit's managerial sloth, kept millions from dozing off on a lazy Sunday afternoon in Augusta.

In Japan, however, viewers pulled an all-night shift to watch Matsuyama win. When the final putt dropped a little after 7 a.m. on Monday, Tokyo Broadcasting's breaking-news bell rang, and a nation filled with golf nuts celebrated.

There will likely be many more golf nuts, and soon. Just as the rise of Korean golf came about thanks to Si Re Pak's playoff victory in the 1998 U.S. Women's Open at Blackwolf Run, this could turn out to be the catalyst for growth of golf in Japan and throughout Asia. Matsuyama is not just a fine golfer to his countrymen, he's a hero, and the green jacket he'll sport for the next year is a symbol of what can be achieved.

Pak won five majors, including the LPGA Championship later in 1998, and within a few years, the LPGA was filled with Korean-born golfers who so dominated the circuit it was hard to find an American on the first page of the leader board at times.

EXTRA! Hideki Matsuyama's Masters victory was front-page news in Japanese newspapers.

Pak retired a few years ago, but as a World Golf Hall of Famer, with a legacy that will last generations.

Matsuyama, at 29, is nowhere near retirement. Nor was his victory a total surprise. It was his sixth victory on the PGA Tour – the first coming at the 2014 Memorial – and 15th worldwide. It might have been the 16th, as he led the 2020 Players Championship after one round with a sparkling 63, tying the course record on Pete Dye's treacherous playground, only to see the tournament abruptly halted by the rapid spread of COVID-19 that week in Florida.

He had been fifth in the 2015 Masters. He's finished fourth in the PGA (2016), second in the U.S. Open (2017), and sixth in the British Open (2013). A victory in a major was all but inevitable for the stylish player, and more can be expected.

How soon? A player who wins at Augusta National can win anywhere, but this year's major sites would seem to set up well for him.

Kiawah Island, site of the upcoming PGA Championship, is open and affected by wind as much as a British seaside links. Torrey Pines, host of the U.S. Open, would work for Matsuyama as well. Then there's Royal St. George's, the year-delayed host of the British Open. He should be in the hunt there also. As will the usual suspects, which will make for three more exciting weeks of championship golf.

The really intriguing question regards Zalatoris. He played himself into the Masters with a tie for sixth in last year's U.S. Open, and now he's in the world top 50. Imagine if his first victory is a major championship. He'd be the new Lee Trevino, only without the red socks.

2021 SEASON PREVIEW

A big year, or regression?

Course operators hope last year's rise in play repeats

BY TIM CRONIN

Golf is about two things: Enjoying the experience and putting numbers in boxes. Often, the torture involved in creating the latter detracts from the joy of the former.

The experience can be in spectating – as in watching one of the six top tournaments, both pro and amateur, in and near the state this year, and about which more later – or in playing.

In 2020, almost everyone was delighted to be able to pick up a pencil after picking up a club. The month-plus when golf wasn't allowed to be played in Illinois at the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic was the springboard for a booming summer that continued deep into the fall.

These numbers went on the National Golf Foundation board, as tallied by Golf Datatech, at the end of the year:

- Nationally, a 14 percent increase in rounds played from 2019 even with the shutdown time factored in;
- A half-million new players, the biggest increase since 2003, and another 5.5 million players returning to the game;
- Total participation up 8 percent from 2019, to 36.9 million Americans playing at least once.

In Illinois, rounds were up 15.4 percent in 2020 compared to 2019, and Indiana, which never closed courses, was up an astounding 23.5 percent. Wisconsin, closed for a shorter period than Illinois, jumped 19.9 percent.

Nationally, the only states where play was down were in tourism-dependent Hawaii (down 32.7 percent), Nevada (down 3.6 percent) and South Carolina (down 0.2 percent).

Overall numbers went up at both public courses (a 12.4 percent gain nationally) and at private clubs (up 19.9 percent nationally). Equipment sales got a big boost in summer from newcomers. Manufacturers with equipment piling up in warehouses were able to move it to stores, and they into the hands of eager golfers, by mid-year.

The obvious question: Can it continue?

The unsure answer: To some degree, unless course owners get greedy and, in trying to make up for the lost six weeks of 2020, raise prices to make up for it.

Some courses have boosted rates, thinking the full tee sheets of July through September will continue no matter what. That's likely not the smartest move. Those owners know golf was the desert island of recreational sport in 2020. There was next to nothing else. Tennis courts and basketball courts were mostly closed. Youth sports, for which parents act as coaches, fans and drivers, were cut back to nearly nothing. Soccer moms and dads could thus play golf, and sometimes the kids did as well.

This year, there will be competition for the dollar. Second-year players especially will have to be motivated to play – and to improve.

That motivation might be internal. Golf is fun even when you're struggling, if you can see improvement. It might be external. The occasional discount rate creates interest in those on the fence, wondering how much they'll play.

The question of how much fans will watch is also up in the air. The idea of a full house, whatever that is in an outdoor sport, is unlikely.

The Masters had about 5,000 fans on hand each day, with no grandstands, which was better than 2020's November playing with only members and wives or girlfriends at Augusta National. But while the Masters can whether a financial hit from a smaller gallery given its presumed deep reserves, other operations can't.

The first of ILLINOIS GOLFER's Big Six this year is the Evans Scholars Invitational, the Korn Ferry Tour stop run by the Western Golf Association. It returns to The Glen Club, around the corner from the WGA's new headquarters building, after last year's edition at Chicago Highlands. The May 27-30 dates coincide with Memorial Day weekend, as was the case for the 2019 inaugural.

The main attraction will likely be Northbrook's Nick Hardy, the Illinois grad who has contended on the KFT circuit and had some noise when he's made a PGA Tour field. He will likely be on the big tour next year, so here's a chance to see him now.

Hardy is worthy of a large fan base, and at the Evans, spectators will be able to register through Servpro, a Glenview company, which is picking up the tab for attendees. If there's a limit on crowd size, it hasn't been announced, but KFT galleries aren't generally large anyway.

The second weekend of note, the June 11-13 Arnold Palmer Cup at Rich Harvest Farms, is the annual gathering of college notables in a Walker Cup-Ryder Cup team format, with the U.S. playing Europe in both male and female competition. It was played at Rich Harvest in 2015 – the last time Arnie attended the bash he created in 1997 – which means Jerry Rich's backyard digs will be the second course to hold the Palmer Cup twice, joining the King's own Bay Hill Club and Lodge.

Alas, the 25th Palmer Cup won't have spectators, and may not even have volunteers. The safety of the teams was the first consideration, and the decision was made when vaccinations were just beginning.

The first full week of July brings the 50th John Deere Classic to TPC Deere Run in Silvis, a year after it was scheduled to be played. The Deere was canceled last year because Illinois was in a safety phase that allowed no spectators, and it essentially cost the tournament less money to not play than to play.

The good news last year was the Birdies for Charity operation continued, and raised over $12 million for the hundreds of charities in the Quad Cities metro area, a remarkable achievement.

The good news this year is the return of the tournament, complete with most of the 50th anniversary hoopla that was to take place last year. That includes a book, written by ace QC journalist Craig DeVrieze, who goes back to the days when it was the Quad Cities Open. It will be a keeper.

The number of spectators will be determined closer to the tournament, which begins with the July 7 pro-am. Tickets will be digital and will have to be bought online, either directly from JohnDeereClassic.com or through Ticketmaster, and can be transferred.

July's waning days bring the two oldest American amateur championships this side of the USGA to the Chicago area. The Women's Western Amateur comes first, July 19-24 at Park Ridge Country Club. No spectators were allowed at Prestwick Country Club last year, but it's expected fans will be permitted, at least in limited numbers, this year. The same is expected at the Western Amateur on July 26-31, when it returns to the site of its first playing, the Glen View Club in Golf, the little town named after the railroad stop where the WGA long had its headquarters.

Sarah Shipley and Pierceson Coody, who won at Crooked Stick in Carmel, Ind., before a handful of members, are expected to return to defend their respective titles.

The last of our Big Six is the biggest golf competition not a major, but major in its way: the Ryder Cup. A novelty for spectators and a walk-over for the American team until Seve Ballesteros arrived on the scene – thanks to Jack Nicklaus' suggestion to include mainland Europeans on the Great Britain and Ireland squad – the scrap for the little trophy with the statue of Abe Mitchell atop it is the most rabidly attended competition in the game.

Will it be this year at Whistling Straits? That's the hope of the hosting Kohler Company, as well as the PGA of America, as the quadrennial appearance on an American course is a financial windfall for it. There's been no update since Feb. 23, when the Ryder Cup ticket website announced "We are carefully monitoring the evolving situation ... and will communicate any relevant updates as soon as details are finalized."

Since the first ball isn't struck in anger until Sept. 24, there's plenty of time for things to ease. Given both the rate of vaccination and Wisconsin's lax record regarding COVID-19 precautions, it would be a surprise not to see a full house of 45,000 or so fans. The question is how many will be allowed in from Europe, where lockdowns remain common. To have only a small contingent from across the pond would be unfortunate.

BRASSIE'S LAST DAYS? The Chesterton, Ind., layout is for sale for $2.75 million. Bring your own mowers.

So you want to buy a golf course?

Not everything in the golf business is rosy. Courses continue to go on sale in what remains a buyer's market. Pontiac Elks, for instance, was recently bought by the city of Pontiac (more on page 12) for $500,000, well under its value.

In the last days of April, word came that The Hawk Country Club, a 95-acre complex in St. Charles, is on the market. The owners want $1.6 million for the private course and the 12,000-square-foot clubhouse.

In central Illinois, Sunset Hills Golf Course in Pekin is for sale, with the owners asking $1.75 million for the 130-acre operation and 7,400-square-foot clubhouse located smack in a residential development.

To the west, Kewanee Dunes Golf Course, a venerable 18-hole course just outside of Kewanee, is reportedly under contract after the owners marketed it at $750,000. Now word yet if they got their price or sold for less, the recent trend.

In Indiana, The Brassie, a 1990s layout in Chesterton, Ind., is closed and for sale. If you have $2.75 million, jump on it. If you have less, you may still be able to pick it up, but the equipment previously used to maintain the golf course has been sold separately, so be ready to spend on a set of mowers for greens and fairways, or rent some sheep.

If that's too pricey for you, go south a few miles to U.S. 30, east of the I-65 interchange, and you'll find Ringo's Golf Center, a pro shop and driving range. That's for sale for $750,000, not including inventory or the name of the business.

Farther south in Indiana, in little Monticello, a few miles from the reopened Indiana Beach amusement park, is Hollow Acres, a barebones 9-hole course with miniature golf and a snack bar. That's on offer for $445,000.

2020 IN REVIEW

Achievement in shadow

Pandemic-era winners earned honor in relative silence

BY TIM CRONIN

The photograph at right, Illinois Open champion Bryce Emory addressing the gallery that watched him win at White Eagle, is the exception to the general rule in 2020. Because of the COVID-19 coronavirus pandemic, crowds were not allowed to gather. Prudence meant wearing a mask and staying six feet apart wherever you went – strictures which continue in these early weeks of the vaccination of the world.

Golf became something of an exception. It was the first sport to return, built largely upon the vast acreage on which the game is played. A sport of fellowship is nonetheless played in solitary fashion, caddies aside.

A hole was ripped in the schedule and only partially repaired. The Masters was moved to November. The British Open wasn't played at all, the R&A taking their pandemic insurance money and shifting venues back a year.

Locally, the CDGA cancelled most of its championships because it couldn't guarantee being able to conduct qualifying rounds. The Illinois PGA maneuvered its four major championships, including the Illinois Open, to later in the calendar and managed to find a way for qualifying rounds.

Emory and his peers had a gallery of perhaps 300 when everyone at White Eagle was tallied. There were that many at Olympia Fields Country Club for the BMW Championship only when the television crew was added in. Otherwise, that grand affair, which culminated in the puissant putting of first world No. 1 Dustin Johnson and then world No. 2 Jon Rahm, was seen in person by a handful of marshals and WGA and PGA Tour staffers.

What they saw was one of the most dramatic punches and counterpunches in golf history. Johnson, needing to make a 43-footer to tie Rahm at 4-under-par 276 on the 18th green of Olympia's treacherous North Course, sank it, forcing sudden-death.

A dozen or so minutes later, Rahm topped Johnson and brought back memories of Jerry Barber by sinking a sidehill-downhill 66-foot 5-inch snake for a birdie to – once Johnson couldn't drop a ho-hum 33-footer – capture the BMW, ye olde Western Open, and all the glory that went with it.

It was the type of finish that in another era might have seen the victor carried off the green by the gallery. Rahm got a round of applause from the few dozen on hand.

Hideki Matsuyama, incidentally, tied for third with Joaquin Niemann. They barely got a pat on the back.

All major national junior tournaments were canceled, including the Western Junior and Women's Western Junior. They'll be back this year. The Illinois High School Association wiped out golf and several other fall sports – football was moved to spring – which denied Ben Sluzas of Lockport Township a chance at a third straight individual crown, but the NIU-bound Sluzas made the most of his one chance at glory, winning the Illinois Junior, conducted by the Illinois Junior Golf Association at Makray Memorial in Barrington, in his final opportunity.

Downstate, Shannyn Vogler of Moline won the Illinois Junior Girls championship at Hickory Point in Forsyth, repeating her success of 2019 with a five-stroke victory over Sunbi Kwon of Orland Park.

Most of the other competition was within Illinois PGA ranks. Mike Small won his 13th Illinois PGA Championship with a 13-under-par showing on Medinah No. 1.

Curtis Malm of White Eagle collected his fourth state major by winning the Illinois Players Championship at Conway Farms.

And Jonathan Duppler took advantage of the rearranged schedule to capture the Illinois PGA Match Play crown on his home turf of Elgin Country Club.

One thing that didn't happen last year was the World Long Drive Championship. The plan was to bring the championship to Cog Hill last September, part of a series of appearances of the big hitters in the next few years.

But about the time the long drive group was making the deal, the pandemic hit and put things on hold. Owner Golf Channel pulled out and put the long drive operation up for sale, the harbinger of other major cutbacks at the network.

Cog Hill had planned to clear room on the southeast side of Archer Ave. for a 750-yard long driving area, long enough to hold the most outlandish drives.

The long drivers have since regrouped and formed Pro Long Drive, but Cog Hill is not in the picture.

Along with several other renovations (see The Buzz, page 2), a pair of major construction projects for prominent private clubs were announced. Medinah hired a group headed by Geoff Ogilvy to redo (again) its famed No. 3 course, while Olympia Fields brought on Andy Staples to work over the South Course first, and eventually the North Course. The South re-do, including a massive tree removal, will cost $4 million.

Deaths last year included teacher and long-drive champion Marty Joyce, 68, on Jan. 17; Milwaukee-based golf writer Dan Manoyan, 69, on April 20; teacher and trick-shot whiz Peter Longo, on May 28; and Mistwood owner Jim McWethy, 76, on June 22. All brought joy to the world and are dearly missed.

Finally, in the upset of the century, the membership of Chicago Golf Club voted to add air-conditioning to the entire clubhouse. Progress!

ILLINOIS GOLFER COVER STORY

A league of your own

There are plenty of local options for the competitive player

BY TIM CRONIN

The majority of competition coverage in ILLINOIS GOLFER concerns the doings of the pros when they swoop through Illinois, the local professional scene, and the play of top amateurs in the CDGA's championships.

That barely scratches the surface. There's a universe of adult competition beyond that, with several organizations offering tournament play among amateurs with both low and medium handicaps. Most every local player started in it, or on a similar level elsewhere. For those new to the scene, here's a primer on what's what, focusing on the Chicago area, where most of our readers – all of whom are potential or active players – are.

One group isn't really a group, but is as established as any other. It's nicknamed the Manure Tour, so called because many of the tournaments on the circuit are downstate.

This year's Manure Tour teed off, as it generally does, with the Will County Amateur at Balmoral Woods. This year's Will County Am almost made national headlines, as CBS football analyst Tony Romo, a past WCA champion, was in the lead after the first round, but Romo was sacked for a 77 in the final round and finished tied for eighth, six strokes back. Bennett Cotton took the title with a score of 4-under-par 140, beating Dominic Scaletta by two strokes, and thus the won right to wear the Brown Jacket.

Other Manure Tour stops include the Joliet Amateur at Wedgewood on June 5-6, the Pine Hills Invitational on June 12-13, and Blackberry Amateur at Blackberry Oaks on June 26-27, and the North Shore Amateur at Sunset Valley on July 28-29.

There aren't point standings per se, but many of the usual suspects play in these and other weekend battles each summer, and have a general idea of where they rank. And most, if not all, of the regular contenders also show up in the CDGA Amateur and Mid-Amateur and the Illinois Amateur. The Manure Tour is a great place for the elite to hone their skills under pressure.

Most all the Manure Tourers came up through the local ranks, self-governed groups that have extensive tournament schedules. The three notable Chicagoland groups are NIMAGA, the Weekly Challenge Golf Tour and the new one, the Chicago Golf Tour.

The CGT is different from the other two in that tournaments aren't single day come-all-ye events, but conducted over a span – usually two weeks – with scores tallied as they go. A Chicago Golf Tour member must play with at least one other CGT member for their round to count and declare it a tournament round before teeing off.

"I really wanted something for the common man looking to play competitive golf," said CGT founder Tom Tassone. "The 5-to-20 handicapper. I knew of NIMAGA as well as the CDGA. They're geared to lower handicappers. But there really wasn't anything open to the common amateur golfer."

The Chicago Golf Tour has South, West and North divisions, each with a slate of competitions. Tassone started with the South Side Tour in 2019, had 107 people sign up, saw it grow to 137 players last year, and had added the other brackets this year. When entries closed in mid-March, Tassone had 492 players across the three zones.

"The first year was all word of mouth, and then we built the website."

Tassone closed entries for the year largely because it's complicated to all players to the computer program he uses once play begins.

"It gets a bit complicated once everything's done," he said. "There comes a point when you have to put a deadline in."

The flexibility in scheduling attracted some players. Oddly, the boom in golf play once courses were allowed to open last May 1 caused some difficulty in his players getting tee times. That should be less of a problem this year.

He doesn't see a problem with the two-week time to play an official round, though some players could look at a weather forecast and try to pick a windless day, for instance.

"That went into our research," said Tassone, a 34-year-old operating engineer. "A lot of amateur tours have started to pop up. I would assume we've caught the eye of a lot of golfers. Flexibility in scheduling is by far our most attractive asset.

"We're definitely not a beer league," he said. "It's a mixture of a men's league and fun. There's a competitive nature to the Chicago Golf Tour."

Tassone, like others, has to deal with courses for tee times. In his case, he's sometimes found it easier to get a guarantee that players will be able to get on, but hasn't always been able to get a group rate, since his group isn't there together.

Like the others, the CGT plays on solid courses ranging from Mistwood to Harborside International to Pine Meadow to Highlands of Elgin.

NIMAGA – the Northern Illinois Men's Amateur Golf Association – was created in the winter of 1959-60, and is in its 62nd season of play.

It came about through necessity. In that era, the CDGA was strictly a private-club group, and all the public golfers had no organization to conduct tournaments since the demise of the Chicago Daily Fee Golf Association during the Great Depression. A group of solid public players led by Arthur "Ace" Ellis formed the group to run tournaments and raise funds to send a sextet of players to the 1960 U.S. Public Links Championship in Hawaii.

NIMAGA, partly because of publicity from local golf writers, was an almost instant success. The first one-day tournament, at the public Evergreen Golf Club, attracted about 40 players. After four tournaments, NIMAGA had raised $3,000, enough to send the publinx players to Hawaii.

Some 200 players were members by the end of 1960, and the usual growing pains, including a handicap system – it was years before the CDGA allowed public players access to its system – and getting tournament sites were met and conquered.

NIMAGA helped create the Eskimo Open at Glenwoodie in 1963, and looked to the future in 1967 with the birth of the NIMAGA Junior Division. That grew to over 600 players before it was split off as the Illinois Junior Golf Association.

Today, NIMAGA runs a 19-tournament schedule from April to October, ranging from the NIMAGA Cup to a special tournament against a similar group from Milwaukee. Beginning this year, with the advent of the World Handicap System, handicaps are run through the CDGA. There's live scoring via Golf Genius, and everyone plays on the same day, just like a PGA Tour stop, with the exception of the match play tournament, when opponents agree on a time and place.

NIMAGA had no competition until Dr. James Griseto, a retired dentist and avid player, decided to drill down on an idea that had been in his craw for some time, creating a tournament series that would mix amateurs playing with handicaps along with what he called "non-amateurs" playing for cash and prizes.

With that in mind, his Weekly Challenge Golf Tour was born in 1989 and is going strong in its 33rd season.

"Golf in this format, with fair competition, is truly a unique experience," according to the history on the WCGT website.

The Challenge Tour handicaps players based only on their tournament scores, but an outside handicap – CDGA or from another USGA-affiliated group – is needed for membership. Doc Griseto always worried about sandbaggers. He also came up with the "non-amateur" term, according to the WCGT, "to prevent the mistaken conclusion that only very good players can be professionals." (NIMAGA and the CGT, like most amateur tournaments, award only merchandise credits.)

In 2019, the last full year, seven players earned more than $1,000 in cash or merchandise credits. In the WCGT's first 30 years, some $25 million has been paid out.

There's also a notable group to mention south of I-80. The Metropolitan Amateur Golf Association is a regional group in the St. Louis area akin to the CDGA, conducting tournaments and running a handicap service, among other things. But it also runs a one-day tournament series more akin to NIMAGA and the WCGT. The MAGA's six-week Amateur Series starts May 3 at WingHaven Country Club, and will have five divisions, two for seniors and one for women, a first in 2021.

To its credit, the CDGA recently started what it calls Social Competitions, which it calls "casually competitive events open to all CDGA members, regardless of skill." That's further proof there's something for everyone who wants to tee it up with something on the line.

Ten Hall of Fame finalists announced

FROM IG NEWS SERVICES

nd then there were 10.

And then there were 10. The Illinois Golf Hall of Fame Selection Committee cut a field of 27 candidates to 10 for this year's class on April 22, and now comes the hard work: Selecting this year's inductees from a field all worthy of induction. That chore comes May 25.

"We had outstanding nominees to choose from representing from many aspects of the game," said selection committee chair Tim Cronin.

The finalists:

- Doug Bauman – A dogged competitor who has won five state majors since arriving at Biltmore Country Club from Wisconsin in 1985. He captured two Illinois PGA Championships in succession in 1996 and 1997, but has made match play his specialty, with three Illinois PGA Match Play titles, four runner-up placings, and three more semifinal appearances.

- Randy Kane – Nicknamed "The Family Doctor" for his close attention to the turf quality of the Chicago District's courses, Kane has a doctorate in plant pathology from Cornell University and served as the CDGA's first director of turfgrass programs from 1985 through 2006. He was a leader in identifying problems and passing the solutions to some 400 clubs in the CDGA area.

- Phil Kosin – Founded and ran Chicagoland Golf from 1989 until his death in 2009. He added a website when digital applications blossomed. Concurrently, he produced and hosted the Chicagoland Golf radio show on WSCR-AM 670, which continues today as The Scorecard show. He previously had worked for the original ILLINOIS GOLFER and several other golf publications, including Golf Traveler. He founded the Illinois Women's Open in 1995, which has since had his name attached to it, and the Chicago Friends of Golf, a charity endeavor.

- Michael Miller – Built the stature of the Illinois Section and area of golf in general over 20 years as the Illinois PGA's Executive Director. Miller helped create the Illinois PGA Foundation, attracted corporate sponsors and boosted the visibility of the Hall of Fame through exhibits at The Glen Club. In his time, the Section created the Youth Skills Challenge for the 2006 PGA Championship, today's Drive, Chip and Putt program.

- Tim O'Neal – Like mentor Bill Ogden before him, Tim O'Neal was been a mentor to many assistants in his career as professional at North Shore Country Club. Twenty-three of his assistants and students have become head professionals or directors of golf. Twice a Section professional of the year (fSouth Florida 1994, Illinois 2005), O'Neal served on the Illinois PGA and Foundation boards and is currently president of the Illinois PGA Foundation board.

- Bruce Patterson – A two-time Illinois PGA professional of the year (1993-96), Patterson was instrumental in creating the Illinois PGA Foundation. The longtime professional / director of golf at Butler National Golf Club spent a decade as president of the foundation, and was also the Section president in 1995-96, and recently a PGA regional director. Named the Illinois PGA teacher of the year in 2001. He earned PGA Master Professional status with a thesis on hosting a PGA Tour tournament, the Western Open, at his club.

- Gary Pinns – the only person to win the Illinois Open five times, doing so across three decades, with the first title in 1978 as an amateur. He then turned professional and captured three more in the 1980s, and the last in 1990. Pinns was also All-ACC at Wake Forest for two years while the team's captain on a squad that included Gary Hallberg, Scott Hoch and Robert Wrenn.

- Jerry Rich – Rich has had an impact on golf far beyond what he expected when he decided to build a three-hole course behind his Sugar Grove estate. As his course expanded to 18 holes, his influence grew. Rich Harvest Farms has hosted the Solheim Cup, Western Amateur, Western Junior and the NCAA Championships. This year, it will host the Palmer Cup the second time. He also came up with the concept for the International Crown, the LPGA's world team tournament. Personally generous, he hosts the Kids Golf Foundation in a building on the Rich Harvest campus.

- Dave Ryan – from downstate Taylorville, Ryan has built a formidable resume in senior amateur golf. His victory in the 2016 U.S. Senior Amateur at Old Warson Country Club in St. Louis is the capstone, so far, in a career including four Illinois Senior Amateur titles and seven senior player of the year awards.

- Jim Suttie - One of the game's foremost teachers, Dr. Jim Suttie counts Paul Azinger, Chip Beck, Jeff Sluman, Kevin Streelman and Mark Wilson among his more successful students. The DeKalb native starred at Northern Illinois, then moved into coaching and teaching.

Pontiac buys Elks course, clubhouse for $500K

BY TIM CRONIN

There are visionaries in Pontiac. While some cities close municipal courses – Rockford shuttered Elliot Golf Course, one of its five, last year – Pontiac has gone in the other direction.

The central Illinois city of about 12,000 on Interstate 55 bought Pontiac Elks from the local Elks lodge at the top of the month. The price was $500,000, and keeps the course both public and allows continued access by lodge members at a special rate.

The course has been there since 1919, when Tom Bendelow came down from Chicago on the train and laid out nine holes that opened in 1921, with a big revision by Larry Packard in 1973, when he built 13 holes to get the total to 18, the extra holes to replace land sold for condos to finance the expansion.

The Pontiac crowd was creative then and now. The now came about because the Elks were looking at a financial hole that would be difficult to climb out of. This makes it happen.

"This is a win/win for the Elks and the Pontiac community," Pontiac mayor Bill Alvey said.

The city gets everything, including the golf clubhouse and the attached restaurant and hospitality center, plus an indoor pool. The Elks will run the restaurant and the city will run the golf course and pro shop.

Pontiac Elks Club

SAVED Pontiac residents will still be able to enjoy the Elks course thanks to the city's April 1 purchase.

The Elks had controlled the course since 1946, when the Pontiac Golf and Country Club was on its last legs. That deal opened the course to limited public access, a door that opened wider over the years. By 2010, about 40 percent of the 20,000 annual rounds were public play.

The course sits on the flood plain of the Vermillion River, with four holes adjacent to it. Turtle Creek bubbles across the first fairway, which is barely a mile east of Interstate 55, and west of old Route 66.

There's another public course just north of Pontiac, but the Elks is the better course, and the city, hurting for industry – the big businesses in town are a Caterpillar Tractor plant and a state prison – needed a recreational facility not only for today's residents, but to help attract more residents, and ideally, another big firm.

The announcement was made April 1. Five days later, Alvey won re-election to a third term as mayor in a race where the golf course purchase wasn't a contentious issue. Challenger Gerald Causer said, "The council realized that this was a great deal offered at a dismal time. But, moving forward towards the future, we couldn't let it go."

It's expected the course will be renamed in 2022. For now, it's still Pontiac Elks, immediately off Route 116, waiting for company.

At 100, Guy Ellis is one in a million

Seniors love golf. Many play a couple of times a week.

Guy Ellis of Decatur plays three times a week and thinks he'll do so for another five years.

By then, he'll be 105 years old.

The centenarian, discovered by Champaign's WCIA-TV, is a regular at Red Tail Golf Course, and can still hit the ball well. And he may have discovered golf's – and life's – secret.

"To me, it's simple," Ellis said. "I try not to worry about a damn thing. And I've always liked everybody. I never disliked anybody. I try to like everybody. And it's worked for me. I just seem to get along with everybody. We're all here together, by God, we should get along."

As one can imagine, he has a legion of friends, and said they keep him going.

"And they all know that I'm going for 105," Ellis said. "And they all urge me on. They all claim I do them some good, but they don't know they do a lot for me... Keep me going."

In five years, Ellis said, he'll sit down and think about his future plans. For now, fore!

Disc golf rules in Godfrey

Little did the good fathers of downstate Godfrey realize what they were doing when they invited the Professional Disc Golf Association to town. They would start the ball rolling toward the awarding of a Governor's Home Town Award for Economic Opportunity for La Vista Park's disc golf course.

The announcement came March 30. There will eventually be a plaque and a road sign commemorating the award.

"I look at this as another way to show off our wonderful community to people who will be visiting the course to enjoy playing disc golf," Godfrey mayor Mike McCormick said.

This was more than just a bunch of baskets designed to catch Frisbees. This was an 18-hole course across many of the 93-acre park.

Car dealer Jason Enos pushed for it, the Alton-Godfrey Rotary Club jumped onboard, and the Bluff City Disc Golf Club provided expertise.

That helped bring a full field of 144 disc golfers to town under the auspices of the St. Louis Disc Golf Club. They came from five states.

Illini ink Bloomington's Barger

Mike Small's Illinois golf program just gets better and better. Aside from winning the Ohio State Invitational in mid-April, the last tourney before the Big Ten Championship, Small lined up another standout in T.J. Barger of Bloomington.

Barger, a senior, won the IHSA 2A title as a sophomore and finished fourth in his junior year. There was no IHSA championship in 2020 thanks to COVID-19, but Barger more than made up for that with a series of good showings in AJGA play against players from across the world.

"It boosted my confidence to know that I can play with these guys," Barger told Jim Benson of The Pantagraph. "I realized when coach Small and the U of I got in contact with me, if I got the chance I'll take it."

Barger will be categorized as a preferred walk-on, which means he gets everything but a full scholarship. As he put it, "I get all the perks like a scholarship golfer gets. I can earn money year-by-year. It just depends on how I play and perform."

In picking Illinois, Barger left behind offers from Nebraska and hometown Illinois State.

The powerhouse Illini have sent numerous players into professional golf. Barger is eager to make his mark.

"I think I'll find my way in the lineup sooner rather than later," Barger said. "I can get a lot better."

Crab Orchard will remain 18 holes

New owner Russell Brown of Carterville promised Crab Orchard Golf Course, that southern Illinois town's gathering place, will remain an 18-hole operation after buying it from longtime owner Steve Heckel last September.

Brown made the deal with Heckel before someone else's offer was accepted. The other deal might have seen the course eliminated or cut to nine holes.

"My family and I sat down and we decided to preserve the community and the golf course," Brown told the Southern Illinoisan. "It's kind of a keystone of the community."

People

Mike Weiler returns to Illinois as the new boss at Eagle Ridge in Galena. ... In Carbondale, the park district's board named Trey Anderson as the operation's interim executive director, effective May 15. Anderson, who joined the park district in 2006, has been the acting superintendent at the park district's Hickory Ridge Public Golf Course the past three years. He will serve as the interim district head with current executive director Kathy Renfro leaving after 14 years.
