Biggest stage in golf
Augusta National unmatched for drama

The Buzz

A new twist to Amen Corner

The buzz at Augusta National this year is louder than it's been in at least three years. Next to nobody was on the grounds for the 2020 edition, held in November because of COVID-19. If you were wearing a green jacket, you got in. Otherwise, tune in CBS, pals.

Last year, it was back to April, but attendance was still limited, no grandstands were built, and the roars were muted.

Not this year. The galleries have returned in force, and Washington Road, the highway from which you turn into Magnolia Lane if you are so lucky, is a madhouse.

Toss in the reappearance of Tiger Woods, who hasn't played in a tournament since that 2020 toonimint in November, and anticipation is nearly off the scale.

Oh, and don't forget Dude Perfect, those rascalions who do crazy things at traditional sites.

They've already played through. A video released Sat., April 2 – four million views on YouTube the first day, thank you very much, and 5.5 million as we write this – has the Dudes and pallie Bryson DeChambeau cavorting about Amen Corner.

No, really. This was not a CGI production, though Trackman was in use, all the better to track footballs and softballs in the air. Somehow, the Dudes convinced the button-down green jacketed leadership at Augusta to let them in the gates and do their thing.

Previously, we had not thought of Fred Ridley as a follower of pop culture, unless it was The Lawrence Welk Show. But he, and the Augusta board, signed off on the video, cleared the course to make it happen, and even convinced – ordered? – Jim Nantz to croon “Hello, friends” for the short.

Immediately, cries could be heard from golf's stodgy set that this was a desecration of the temple.

Gents, remember something. It's called golf, not an autopsy. Golf is supposed to be fun. The Dude Perfect crowd made a fun video, 11 minutes 17 seconds of an “All Sports Golf Battle,” millions are viewing it, and that might just get a few more people interested in teeing it up. What's wrong with that.

Next thing you know, they'll play poker instead of bridge in the clubhouse. Now that would be shocking.

What was Jerry Rich thinking?

This being the era of political correctness and social outrage, Jerry Rich's decision last month to host the Saudi Arabia-backed and Greg Norman-fronted LIV Invitation Tour at his backyard Rich Harvest Farms in mid-September raised eyebrows.

"How could he sell his soul for that?" asked one prominent member of Chicago's golf community, asking anonymity. "He'll never get a PGA Tour event now."

The Saudi financing of Norman's long-wished world golf tour is a double whammy to many. First, the Saudi money. Few think twice of filling their gas tank with the product of Saudi oil fields even as the family-controlled government there limits human rights, executes prisoners and conducts a war with Yemen. But sports is another realm to some.

Second, the PGA Tour's all-or-nothing stance. Play in an LIV tournament and you'll be barred from PGA Tour play, no matter what your status. As we've said, the lawyers will have a field day with that one.

Rich has always been something of a contrarian. That's one way to build a fortune, by building the better mousetrap when others say it can't be done. Rich did that with software for Wall Street, then sold high, the fortune big enough for him to buy thousands of acres outside of Sugar Grove – several times the size of Monaco, though no sea view – and plant his own mostly self-designed golf course on it.

Hosting the LIV Tour is a contrarian move in a sport that favors bowing to the party line.

So far, Rich has said only this: "Hope to see a big turn out from all you golf fans! This will be huge for Illinois and the Chicagoland area."

The site fee for hosting in the upstart tour must be good, because it's not like Rich needs it.

What Rich Harvest hasn't had a great deal of in recent years was attention. His one-on-one argument over marketing with Mike Whan when the latter ran the LPGA resulted in the group pulling the 2016 International Crown from Rich Harvest – and it was Rich's idea. Last year's Palmer Cup was played at Rich Harvest before only a handful of people because of COVID-19.

Rich has 18 holes, a pair of world-class practice facilities, and a series of buildings that serve as clubhouses, pro shops, residence halls and an indoor practice center.

He's hosted the Solheim Cup, the Western Amateur, the NCAA Championship, the Western Junior, and sundry other amateur championships since the course, which started as a few reversible practice holes, was expanded to a full 18.

Now, presuming players sign up to play, comes the LIV Invitation Tour. With it, Rich hopes, will be thousands of fans. If a worldwide television package comes together, Rich Harvest Farms would be seen worldwide. What course owner, private or public, wouldn't want that?

Like anyone, Rich would prefer receiving bouquets than brickbats. He's a decent guy.

A few years ago, he donated the land and the funding for a new Catholic parish adjacent to his property after his wife died. He has a pet project to grow the game, the Kids Golf Foundation of Illinois, that since 1998 has seen 250,000 children learn the fundamentals of the game for free. The foundation is the first item on the list that will benefit from the LIV weekend.

The list of benefits was issued to deflect criticism because of Saudi funding of the tour. The Formula One racing circuit has received similar criticism for racing on a new circuit in Jeddah – including recently a few miles from an oil depot bombed by Yemani forces the same weekend.

"Sportswashing," the term for this, is not new. Witness the Olympics in Moscow and Beijing, to name two garden spots, plus the granddaddy of them all, in Nazi-controlled Berlin in 1936.

Golf is no different. The PGA Tour would prefer you pay no mind to its stalled tournament series in China. South Africa had million-dollar tournaments during apartheid. Now come the Saudis, not only hosting but bankrolling a tour and offering bonuses for name players.

The Rich Harvest tournament will be the sixth of eight 54-hole weekends and the fourth of four in the United States. The purse of $25 million – $20 million for up to 48 individuals, $5 million for a team concept most will ignore – is standard for the LIV circuit.

Where there's money, golfers usually follow. And Jerry Rich is a golfer.

Where it all begins

Augusta National's vexing first hole: toughest start in major championship golf

TEXT AND PHOTOGRAPHY BY TIM CRONIN

Donald Ross once opined that the meeting between a golfer and a course's first hole should be "a firm handshake." He wanted a course to challenge a player, but not beat him up – at least not right away.

Ross, who designed a catalog of classic courses, including Seminole, Pinehurst No. 2, and the courses of the Chicago area's Beverly, Oak Park and Evanston clubs, didn't have a hand in the design of Augusta National Golf Club. That was the creation of architect Alister MacKenzie and playing legend Bobby Jones.

Their collaboration produced an instant classic, and one that's been tweaked nearly every year since the playing of the first Augusta National Invitation Tournament in 1934. (Everyone but Jones called it the Masters from the start, and he finally gave in in 1939.)

The MacKenzie-Jones first hole isn't a handshake so much as it's a slap in the face. Think Will Smith surprising Chris Rock at the Oscars. First-timers, whether they're players in the Masters or lucky guests who have floated on air down Magnolia Lane at the invitation of a green jacketed member, discover that the thrill ride of testing approach angles and roller-coaster greens begins at the start.

Tea Olive, the first hole is called, and these days it's 445 yards from the tournament tee. That's 45 yards longer than the hole was when the course opened in 1932. For years, the distance held – it could be stretched a bit, but not much – and the first tee was directly opposite the door of the pro shop. Today, the tee is up the hill and nearly opposite the back door of the clubhouse, where the putting green used to be. (That was moved east, to behind the 18th green, some years ago.)

On television, it looks like a straightaway hole. It's not. It turns slightly to the right, just enough that the best angle of attack is to hug the edge of or carry a bunker at the landing area on the right side of the fairway.

Good luck with that. From the tournament

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

SANDY TROUBLE The fairway bunker on the first hole is gaping, about 30 yards long, and prevents the perfect angle to the green unless you can drive it about 320 yards.

tee, it's over 300 yards to clear the bunker, and stray the slightest bit to the right and you're in a maze of trees where the wrong carom could put you deep in the thicket of hedges.

Land in the bunker, and you could be about eight feet below the lip of it – and perhaps 15 yards from that lip. It's the first real indication of the scale of Augusta National, where everything from fairways to greens to bunkers is bigger, but the precision needed to play the course well, at least for four days a year, reduces most of that leafy acreage to mere backdrops of beauty.

In the 2008 Masters program, Arnold Palmer wrote, "Despite the addition of some length a few years ago, No. 1 is still a risk-and-reward hole with any tee shot attempting to clear the large bunker on the right being quite a challenge. As such, many contestants play left of the sand, leaving a longer (and most of the time, uphill) approach shot. The length really brings into play the strategically placed fairway bunker."

Palmer recalled that he birdied the first hole in the first and last rounds in 1960, when he won the second of his four Masters titles. Birdies are dearly bought, not just because of the tee shot, but the green, with barely a flat spot on it.

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

ONLY THE BEGINNING Augusta National's first green, seen here in two photos combined, is a rolling carpet where a flat lie is unlikely and a straight putt is impossible.

More than most other courses, the pin position is a determining factor on both the best position for a tee shot – sometimes past the bunker of you can get there, sometimes to the left of it. When the flag is waving enticingly from the back left, only the bravest will go for it, because there's a gaping greenside bunker hugging the edge of the putting surface and a drop-off behind it.

That drop-off runs around the back to the right side of the green and includes a hump on the front right of the green that makes a recovery from a stray shot difficult no matter where the pin is. From some spots, it looks best to putt it. From others, a chip is in order. From others, if the pin is on the other side, something closer to a pitch is needed to avoid a downslope where a chip would land and take all the spin off the shot.

As for the green itself, no putt is assured. Ask Ernie Els, who was in contention starting the final round in 2016, two feet from a safe par, and unbelievably six-putted the first hole for a Masters-record 9.

"It's hard to putt when you have snakes in your head," Els said. "I couldn't putt with a stick. You make some stuff up in your brain, you know, it's difficult. It's something that, what holds you back from doing your normal thing? I don't know what it is.

"I can go to that putting green now and make 20 straight 3-footers. And then you get on the course, and you feel a little different, and you can't do what you normally do. So it's pretty difficult."

Els, a winner of four majors and already in the World Golf Hall of Fame when the unthinkable happened, was never the same after that.

There's something else about No. 1. It looks wide but isn't. As Palmer noted in 2008, "The trees down the left side have grown considerably since I first started playing in the Masters more than 50 years ago. The tee shot is more pinched as a result, causing problems for a hooked drive.”

Last year, No. 1 played to an average of 4.215, the sixth-toughest hole on the course. It yielded only 17 birdies in four rounds. Some years, it’s been the toughest hole. That was the case in 2004, when a mere 13 birdies were rolled in. It has never played under par for a Masters.

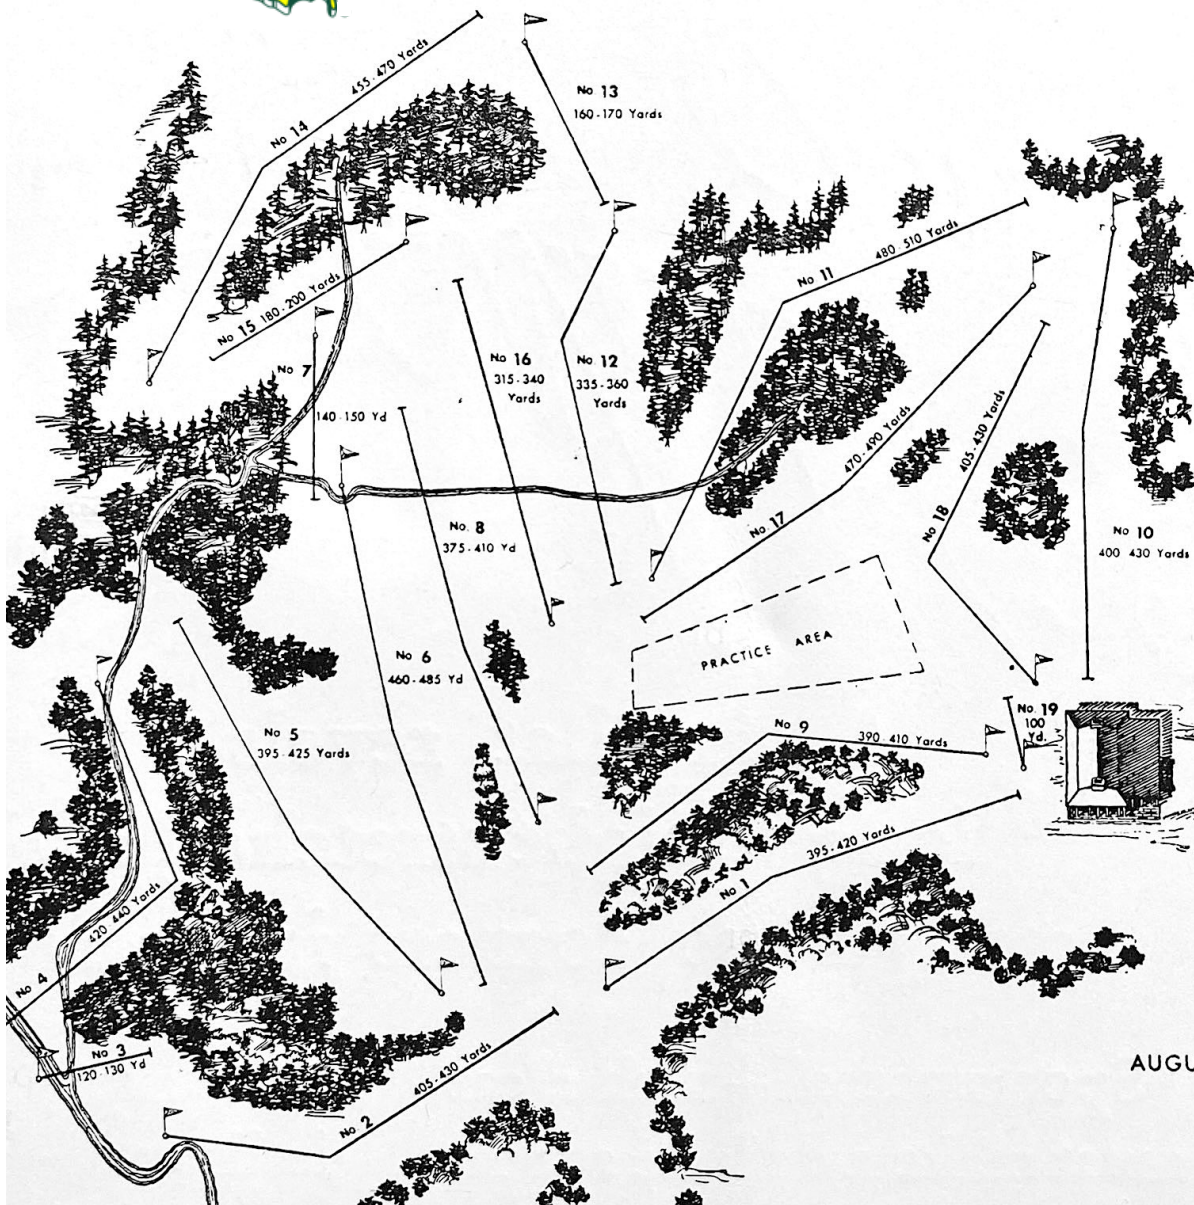

As Fred Couples says, “There’s not a player in the field who wouldn’t take a par every day here.”

Until around the turn of the century, only spectators at Augusta had seen the first hole. A long Saturday rain delay that forced CBS to improvise one year with front nine coverage recorded during a dress rehearsal convinced the green jackets – then led by Hootie Johnson – to allow expanded television of the final round by CBS beginning in 2001. That included scheduled coverage of the entire front nine. All the decades after director Frank Chirkinian, Bobby Jones and Clifford Roberts had gone around the entire course selecting camera positions, finally all of them were in use.

And suddenly, what had been a rumor – the testing first, bold downhill par-5 second, quirky par-4 third and beastly par-3 fourth – was on display for all to see. Viewers marveled at the challenge of what in the first Masters was the start of the back nine. (The nines were flipped because of late-March frost delays at what is now Amen Corner, then the second through fourth holes.)

The first hole, of course, still gets the least air time. Maybe two groups a day, and then it’s gone, not to be seen again until next year. But as a TV star, it’s an outstanding villain, causing trouble almost every time the spotlight lands on it.

Today, the spotlight comes on again.

REVERSAL OF FORM Alister MacKenzie’s original 1932 plan had the nines reversed. Today’s No. 1 was No. 10.

8TH DRIVE CHIP & PUTT CHAMPIONSHIP

Clarendon Hills' Michael Jorski steals the show

BY TIM CRONIN

On his fact sheet, Michael Jorski wrote that his best skill was putting.

He showed how skilled he was on Sun., April 3 in the 8th Drive Chip & Putt Championship at Augusta National. Jorski, a 12-year-old from Clarendon Hills, dropped a 30-foot putt right in the heart of the cup on the 18th green, then ran a 15-footer close to the cup, located in the traditional Sunday pin placement.

That got him into a playoff with Jacob Thompson of Louisville. Another 15-footer to gimme range earned Jorski the title of Boys 12-13 champion after Thompson's putt turned away from the cup.

"Oh my goodness," Jorski said on Golf Channel. "It's amazing how one putt, and just a few inches too, can determine who wins this competition. I needed, in those first two putts, under 1-foot-1 to even get it to a playoff."

This was a come-from-behind victory. He was eighth after the drive competition, but rallied with a couple of good chips, one to 18 inches, and placed third in chipping.

That set the stage for the putts. The 30-footer, on the upper back shelf of the 18th green, curled perfectly to the left and hit the center of the cup.

Then he walked down to the front of the green and was faced with a difficult downhill putt with just a hair of break. After several deep breaths, he knocked it 18 inches short of the cup, again dead on line.

Drive Chip & Putt via USGA

CHAMPION GOLFER Michael Jorski with his Drive Chip & Putt trophy under the big tree behind the Augusta National clubhouse – with his name already on the trophy.

Thompson putted last, and sailed his 30-footer 6 feet 5 inches past the hole. Head hanging, he trudged to the second putt, but regrouped nicely and, needed to get within about 21 inches to force a playoff, sank it.

Jorski's playoff putt was to 21 inches, and Thompson's a bit outside, sliding left as it went past the cup. But it was so close, the tape measure was needed to determine who won.

Then came the announcement, and Jorski let out a really deep breath. He was a winner at Augusta National.

"Stepping up to the ball on all three putts is so nerve-wracking," Jorski said. "And there really isn't a way to block it. You know you're in position to win and know you need good moments out of you."

About then, Jorski's name went up on the big scoreboard by the 18th green.

"It's amazing. It's always been a dream," he said. "It took me two times to get there. After the drive portion, I didn't feel it was going to go well. Then a good chip and 'Hey, I'm back in this thing!'"

Jorski, who lived in Kansas during his first appearance in 2018, is the third winner from Illinois in DCP's eight-year history. He follows Effie Perakis of Glenview (Girls 7-9, 2015) and Christian Kim of Vernon Hills (Boys 10-11, 2016).

"I can deal with pressure well and rise to the occasion," Jorski said. "I knew I needed something good. It's impossible to take the nerves away. It proves I can play when I'm nervous."

Lisa Copeland of Naperville took third in Girls 12-13, winning putting to vault up the chart. Eloise Fetzer of La Grange was eighth in Girls 7-9, with a best skill of sixth in chipping. Ledius Felipe of Poplar Grove took seventh in Boys 10-11, tying for fifth in putting. Martha Kuwahara of Northbrook tied for ninth in Girls 14-15, her best skill a seventh place finish in driving.

What if they held a golf show and nobody came?

Well, almost no manufacturers, as was the case at the PGA Show this winter in Orlando

BY TIM CRONIN

REPORTING FROM ORLANDO, FLORIDA

When a handful of golf merchandisers gathered in the parking lot of PGA National Golf Club in Dunedin, Fla., in 1954, trying to sell their goods to club pros playing in winter tournaments, little did they know they were starting what grew into the PGA Merchandise Show, which grew into and out of a circus tent and was eventually big enough to force several expansions of the mammoth Orange County Convention Center.

It grew like kudzu, adding exhibitors yearly, and with rare exception, everyone was there. The little guys who would become big – Gary Adams' TaylorMade, which started the medal wood revolution in a building in McHenry, was one of the little guys 33 years ago – and the guys who seemingly always have been big, from Wilson to Titleist.

Occasionally, a company would skip a year, but would be back the next. If you sold or bought, you had to be there. It was as important in the golf industry as the trade-only Consumer Electronics Show, which before it moved to Las Vegas filled the east side of McCormick Place to the brim, was to department stores and hi-fi emporiums.

Then came COVID-19, and a whole new way of working, even for salesmen. Even for golf salesmen, who generally shake as many hands as they give out sleeves of balls.

Zoom calls replaced visits. Virtual became

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

ROOM TO SPARE This was about as busy as the Demo Day, which kicks off the PGA Golf Show, ever was.

the byword, replacing the in-person PGA Show in 2021. With golf almost the only sport allowed, rounds boomed, new players came into the game, and equipment sales soared in the second half of 2020. That growth continued into 2021, and early signs for 2022 are promising.

Except for one thing. The PGA Show came back this year, the usual late-January dates in Orlando, but it returned in name only.

The big names weren't there. A foursome of no-shows: Wilson, Titleist, TaylorMade, and Callaway. You'll find their clubs and balls in most every foursome in golf, but not at the show.

Mizuno? No. Ping. No zing. Cleveland? Back home. Cobra. Uncoiled. Nike? Nuh-uh.

In some cases, the absence was to protect employees from COVID-19 – the Omicron strain was at its peak in late January, and Florida is a hotbed for the unvaccinated. In others with supply-chain issues, the thought was why display what's already been sold. But the end result was a show floor for manufacturers without a manufacturers' floor show.

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

PGA SHOW SIGHTS Cog Hill's Kevin Weeks (left) gave a seminar on wedge fitting; the Show floor (center) was as sparsely attended as the Demo Day by both vendors and buyers; Stix founder and CEO Gabe Coyne (right) headed the only clubmaker at Demo Day, and drew plenty of interest.

The same was true of soft-goods purveyors. Fairway & Greene, Polo Ralph Lauren, Travis-Mathew and Puma were among the notables missing. The usual bulky directory of who was where on the floor was reduced to four pages. Road maps of Rhode Island are bigger.

There were a few familiar names to be seen. Bridgestone was the big one in equipment, but only their golf ball division was represented. The big tire manufacturer, for which golf is a small division comparatively, didn't display any clubs beyond using theirs to smack their balls on the range.

In apparel, Antigua, UnderArmour and Greg

Norman had booths, but they weren't the behemoths one used to see. The largest booth on the floor belonged to Golfzon, a simulator company, which had several simulators running and people eager to give them a try.

The three biggest booths beyond that belonged to the three major golf cart companies: Club Car, E-Z-Go and Yamaha, displaying various models for those who eschew the caddie.

The conspicuous absences of the usual suspects meant wider aisles than before – something planned because of COVID-19 anyway – and areas of the convention hall left empty, behind blue curtains that barely hid the void. Attendance by buyers – club pros, general managers, public course owners – was also down.

The lackluster nature of the four-day exercise, which began with a Demo Day at a range that once was filled with manufacturers and now barely had a third of the tee space filled, begs the question: What's next?

Will manufacturers, having discovered absence didn't hurt their sales, stay away in 2023? If that's the case, the PGA Show will change into one for smaller companies such as Elgin's Stix Golf, a relatively new firm that happened to be the only club manufacturer on the range and in the hall. Without the big shadow of the Titleists and TaylorMade to distract customers, they got plenty of attention, and ideally orders as well.

RX, the new name for Reed Exhibitions, which bought the operation from the PGA of America in 1999, should be worried. The Chicago Golf Show, a consumer exhibition, canceled this year because of low booth sales. If the big kids in the business continue to stay away from the all-business show, RX may not have a prescription for improving the show's health.

First Tee takes next big step

Ground broken on outdoor practice center

BY TIM CRONIN

Come July, the long hoped-for outdoor practice center for First Tee Greater Chicago participants will be a reality.

Ground was broken on the Lohmann Quitno-designed facility adjacent to the Marovitz (Waveland) Golf Course clubhouse on the lake-front on March 30. The three-month construction timeline will allow kids in the program to putt on the three putting greens, one of them an artificial green of 8,620 square feet, by early summer.

A new first tee for the nine-hole course is also part of the project.

This is Phase 2 of a $1.5 million program that began with a renovation of the clubhouse, much of which was in disrepair, to include a headquarters facility for the First Tee as well as a new area for players for the popular course adjacent to Lake Shore Drive.

Longtime pro tourist and Northwestern alum Luke Donald is assisting in the design of the short game area, which used to be a picnic area that wasn't often used.

"First Tee provides so many kids with opportunities I was so lucky to have growing up," the former world No. 1 said.

Last year, some $230,000 was raised at an outing at North Shore Country Club, and only about $100,000 remains to be raised. Donald, personally interested in the project because of the similar program he enjoyed growing up in England, has been a major reason why the funds have been raised.

"This is an opportunity to do something amazing," Donald said.

"This will be a safe haven for kids to do their homework and work on their games," First Tee Greater Chicago CEO Lea Jesse said when the project kicked off.

Jesse's leadership steadied what had been a rocky trip in financial waters for the local First Tee flagship program. There had been a plan to establish a headquarters at Harborside International, but the budget proved unworkable. Jesse came in, identified the Marovitz facility as something workable, convinced the Chicago Park District to buy in, and now the finish line is in sight,
